| Verse 1     | I heard it in the windIt was a message from the sunAnd it sounded like an angelCrying from aboveTelling me a storyAbout all the world we seeAnd it cursed the power passionAnd the poetry of greed                                                            |
| Verse 2     | The sun was on my faceOn that purple mountain sideAnd I wanted to escapeFrom the destruction that we findBut that voice it did tell meAbout the yin and yang profoundIt was the death of my perceptionI sat up and looked around                              |
| Chorus      | It was a message from the sunAnd something warmed meIt was a message from the sunAnd something told meIt said despite adversityTo stay full of what's beautiful to me                                                                                                 |
| Post-Chorus | What's beautiful to meI try to seeWhat's beautiful to meWhat's beautiful?                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Verse 3     | For every death someone is bornFor every tear there's laughter's soundFor every murder there's a saviorFor every war peace will aboundAnd anger lives with joyYou know that love it walks with hateDestruction and rejuvenationWill be here forever and a day |
| ½ Verse 4   | For every cold heart there's compassionFor the impossible—there're dreamsBut now I look to see the beautyIn spite of all the misery                                                                                                                                           |
